SCHOLARLY ACTIVITY

Scholarly Focus

My work as a scholar generally moves in two directions: one strand is focused on the development of a comprehensive framework for teaching history and social studies that emphasizes teachers' development of pedagogical content knowledge; the other focuses on addressing larger issues in education and communicating those ideas to the general public. This has led me to focus my academic writing on the social studies curriculum and teacher education and my general writing on a range of topics, including the politics of education, assessment, educational psychology, and education policy. I also enjoy studying and writing about the past, especially the history of 20th century social movements and their colloquial expression in folk music.
